tood water had been poured on it. Unhappily his Royal was averse to medicine, and in order that the character of the disease might be ascertained, he ordered that he should be brought to the city, and placed in a room, and attended by physicians, who were to be allowed to examine him, and to prescribe such medicine as they should think proper. The Royal was, however, so much averse to medicine, that he refused to take any, and the disease continued to increase until he died, on the 10th of the month of June, 1790, at the age of 35 years.

John has nothing to do with the position of the Prince of Wales yet that, thanks to the skilful management of his father, next year, after into the empire of the Prince of Wales, a
